He swept me off my feet with just one look and after a summer of awakening my body to passion left me broken. He was twenty-four and to a girl of sixteen, Id never been prepared for the devastation of loving and losing so completely. Time, like all things moves on, but my heart never fully recovered from watching him drive off down that country road out of my life. Fate. Can you really escape your pastl grew up, finished college and moved to the big city. I thought Id left all those memories behind, but fate can be a real bitch. Im a journalist now and my first real assignment throws me face first back in front of Luke. Hes opening a new tattoo parlor in Chicago and they want me to get his story. One look into his blue eyes and Im remembering drinking strawberry wine and the summer nights we spent sharing everything but my virginity. It was inevitable that hed be my first lover. The last summer night wed spent together, I was determined to give him the one thing Id kept from our relationship. At the last moment Id balked but like I said, fate. There was no doubt in my mind that now that he was back in my life, Id end up in his bed. My only sanity My best friend and roommate, Jake. Hes that guy that you can always depend on, the one you have to call your friend because hes just too sweet to be anything else. Fate was...
