Oh, thee must go by all means. But thee won t see there a sweeter woman than mother. And thee won t go? Why should I? I ve been again and again. If I go to Meeting at all I like best to sit in the quiet old house in Germantown, where the windows are all open and I can see the trees, and hear the stir of the leaves. It s such a crush at the Yearly Meeting at Arch Street, and then there s the row of sleek-looking young men who line the curbstone and stare at us as we come out. No, I don t feel at home there. That evening Ruth and her father sat late by the drawing-room fire, as they were quite apt to do at night. It was always a time of confidences. Thee has another letter from young Sterling, said Eli Bolton. Yes. Philip has gone to the far west. How far? He doesn t say, but it s on the frontier, and on the map everything beyond it is marked Indians and desert, and looks as desolate as a Wednesday Meeting. Humph. It was time for him to do something. Is he going to start a daily newspaper among the Kick-a-poos? Father, thee s unjust to Philip. He s going into business. What sort of business can a young man go into without capital? He doesn t say exactly what it is, said Ruth a little dubiously, but it s something about land and railroads, and thee knows, father, that fortunes are made nobody knows exactly how, in a new country....
